AND THE RICHER I GET-THE MORE MPORTANT IT IS TO GUARD MY PRIVACY! HAVE YOU BEEN ONLINE? THERE ARE SOME REAL NUTJOBS OUT THERE!

ONLY ONE OF MANY

I am writing to applaud Camilla Mortensen's as always thorough, informed and situated story May 28 about sexual assault survivors and the UO. The article demonstrates how sadly typical it is for something truly terrible to happen before anything is done that could prevent future tragedies. The UO, caught between worries about perceptions of prospective students, their parents and, above everyone else, donors, hoped this would just go away. It did not.

In this case, as in so many others, it isn't just bad news — it is real human suffering that gets silenced and ultimately lost in policies, legal review and institutional betrayal of those who live and work at the UO (see Jennifer Freyd's exceptional work on this). Laura Hanson is bold and brave, but sadly only one of the many victims of these kinds of crimes and concealments at this and other college campuses.

While the UO is busily adding staff, these problems persist. Needed is a real effort to reveal how our culture teaches and privileges aggression in men (an emphasis on always winning in sports doesn't help), mass media that uses sex to sell everything and true, confidential support systems independent of the university.

STORIES OF COURAGE

I would like to thank Camilla Mortensen for her cover story "Dragged Through the Mud" May 28. This is an informative article handled with grace and integrity. The courage it takes for Laura Hanson (and Brenda Tracy and other individuals who spoke out in the article) to go public with her experience and the treatment she received from the University of Oregon is immeasurable.

This article, coupled with Jon Karakauer's Missoula, should be required reading by students, administrators and parents of students at the UO as well as any other institute of higher learning. What happened in Missoula has been happening on university and college campuses all over the nation. This article is direct testimony of this fact. My hope is that this article is picked up by other news sources and gets wide distribution for its authenticity and its ongoing support of an issue that has, until just recently, been silenced.

Thank you EW, Camilla and the survivors of sexual assault who are speaking out on this extreme violation, beginning with the sexual assault and ending with the institutional betrayal of the university. Accessing counseling records without consent or without a subpoena, really?

DISSERVICE TO SURVIVORS

As a mother and a survivor of sexual assault, ever since your May 28 issue hit the newsstands, I have avoided all public spaces where it is stocked, usually at ground level, perfect for tiny eyes to see. The cover may be provocative, but it is violent and perpetuates the tale of women as helpless victims. I understand the shock value in its imagery, but an article of this nature should be able to stand on its own merits because it is about basic rights and human dignity. When we sensationalize rape in this manner, we do a disservice to survivors and to the young people who are still learning what it means to be a woman.

What my young daughters need to understand is that women are strong, capable and deserving of respect, and because they are young, words and images hold great power over them. They do not yet have the ability to filter out images like the one on your newest cover. The twisted irony is that in promoting women's safety and equality in our community, you have put the youngest generation of women at risk of misunderstanding their worth and role in society.

BE A GROWNUP

The problem with Laura Hanson's experience ["Dragged Through the Mud" 5/28] is that she presents it too vaguely for the outsider to know what indeed did happen to her. For example, she says she asked the "rapist" if he had a condom. That does not strike me as something a victim would ask a rapist. Hanson did not "own" her rape. She was unsure what had happened to her. That attitude makes everyone else unsure too.

What may have helped her cope was to realize early on — like, immediately, that she had been sexually assaulted, call the police at her first opportunity, get to a hospital, have a rape kit done and seen herself as someone who was a victim of a crime and needed to deal with it like the adult she is. It's not enough to cry on your sorority sisters' shoulders, whine and complain how someone did you wrong. You've got to handle the mess like the grownup you're supposed to be, demand respect from the people you deal with and get justice for yourself.

The university folks are not your mommy and daddy; they're just trying to protect their ass. That's it. You're the adult, you were the victim of a crime, so do something about it — and don't expect others to do it for you. The only person who cares about it is — you.

TARGETING HOMELESS

There is recent discussion of a public smoking ban initiative, both downtown and in the parks. It sounds great — on the surface. We're all aware of adverse health effects of cigarettes and odor. I, too, know this well as a former smoker. But underneath the veneer of this "prohealth" campaign is an insidious form of classism, one that will disproportionately target the homeless community who are already at the mercy of our local police force. Meanwhile those with money can find refuge in many of our bars and establishments, or possibly in the comfort of their own homes and vehicles.

For the people on the streets, cigarettes are an appetite suppressant. Homeless people smoke because they're selfmedicating for hunger. Many even use them as a source of short-term stress relief, to have something as a respite from the reality they're in. Compared to all the health risks they face, from hypothermia to malnutrition to being exposed as prey to assault, tobacco should be the least of our concerns, and giving the authorities another tool to oppress those who experience enough harassment — who are time and time again cited and arrested for outrageous policies — is a waste of taxpayer money and outright shameful. I like to think that if we truly care about the health of our community, we'd spend our time and money on keeping people from dying on the streets instead of writing more citations.

Councilor Mike Clark was recently quoted in The Register-Guard, stating, "When we talk about creating a smoke-free downtown, it's not to create a healthy downtown. It's to stop some from

Sacred Salmon and the KBRA

THE TRIBAL TURMOIL OVER WATER RIGHTS ON THE KLAMATH

Over the weekend hundreds of participants along the Klamath River gathered in ceremony for the 2015 Great Salmon Run of the Klamath-Trinity Rivers.

For the first time this year, the Klamath Tribes participated in the run, which has been extended to Chiloquin, Oregon. Members and descendants from all the Klamath Basin river tribes took part in the ceremonial event, beginning May 29 at at the Pacific Ocean and concluding in Chiloquin June 1.

While some participants' intentions were to promote support for the controversial Senate Bill 133, the Klamath Basin Water Recovery and Economic Restoration Act, also known as the Klamath Basin Restoration Act (KBRA), most participants recognized the spiritual significance of the run.

The run, a 260-mile relay, was founded 13 years ago by students from Hoopa Valley High School in response to the death of an estimated 68,000 Chinook salmon caused by artificially low water levels.

Even 13 years later, the fish kill of 2002 still haunts the Klamath River.

In 2015, the struggle the Klamath River salmon face is just as detrimental.

This year, juvenile Chinook salmon have already been dying. According to the Klamath Fish Health Assessment Team, 100 percent of juvenile Chinook salmon in the Klamath River carry a deadly parasite known as C. shasta.

A common misconception in the public is that all the Klamath River tribes support the KBRA. However, the public is not aware that the political turmoil of the KBRA has been destructive to tribal members, igniting disputes that have created tribal divisions, split families and ended lifelong friendships.

While tribal members support dam removal and protecting fish, many do not believe the KBRA adequately represents these aspects that are vital to Klamath, Modoc, Yahooskin culture and spirituality. These tribal members work actively to protect the fish and bring awareness to their survival.

The struggle the salmon face is real, and their struggle has become part of the ongoing battle tribal members face to protect what is sacred to not only spiritual survival but physical survival as well.

Members of a group calling themselves "Honor the Treaty of 1864" who have been working behind the scenes to educate and unite the Klamath Tribal community were present at the ceremonial salmon run

Honor the Treaty of 1864 members gathered water from the headwaters of Spring Creek and poured it into the river at the old Chiloquin dam site to offer as a prayer for a safe journey for the salmon relatives who have sacrificed their lives to spawn since time immemorial.

The run united tribal members from the upper and lower river tribes who were there for the same purpose, which is to continue to advocate, pray and fight for the

For the first time since Honor the Treaty of 1864 was formed last year, tribal members and descendants were allowed to freely express their perspectives regarding the KBRA without being chastised, disrespected and alienated by the Klamath Tribal elected officials.

Despite the political commercialization of the sacred run by Klamath Tribes elected officials, the ceremony was a powerful form of healing for all involved.

Members of the Hoopa Valley Youth Council were in attendance and had the opportunity to connect with members of Honor the Treaty standing united against the KBRA.

Coordinators for the youth council shared their efforts to educate their youth on the vital issues regarding the KBRA and have expressed their disapproval of these water agreements.

Only two tribes in the Klamath basin, the Hoopa Valley Tribe and Yurok Tribe, have retained the right to make a water call for the salmon. Klamath Tribes, however, only retain the right to make a call for the C'waam or sucker fish, but no longer salmon.

Many tribal members are beginning to understand that all bargained-for benefits within the KBRA are achievable without having to permanently relinquish

Through the connections made between upper and down river tribal members at this year's run, advocacy for our sacred salmon relatives is stronger than ever

As we move into the extreme drought season, these newly formed relationships will be crucial for the survival of our sacred salmon relatives.

"The salmon's struggles are our struggles."

Once the salmon stop running, we cease to be a people.

Reducing Exposure

FEWER PEOPLE WILLING TO TOLERATE SECONDHAND SMOKE

strongly urge Eugene's leaders to ban tobacco smoking in public areas. As a longtime resident of Eugene and outdoor enthusiast, I appreciate our many opportunities for recreation. As I cycle along the Willamette River bike trail, I also love to see how many other people enjoy our parks and public places. Having safe places for people to exercise or have family picnics while their children run and play are essential to our community's well-being and liveability. By making downtown and city parks smoke-free, Eugene will once again be in the forefront of communities working together to protect residents from the harms of secondhand smoke.

In the 2014 report "The Health Consequences of Smoking: 50 Years of Progress," the U.S. surgeon general confirmed that there is no risk-free level of secondhand smoke exposure. Amazingly, even brief exposure can be harmful to health. Although this may be a little-known fact, it is becoming more and more popular for people to prefer to not be around tobacco smoke, indoors and out. According to recent surveys, three out of four Lane County residents believe it is important to be protected from secondhand smoke outdoors.

Many of us can remember a time when almost everyone smoked, and doctors even promoted smoking in advertisements. The reduction in tobacco use in the U.S. over the past 50 years demonstrates the importance of regulations and policies to help protect people from the dangers of tobacco and second-hand smoke. In 1965, almost half of American adults smoked. Today, due in large part to the very type of policies that Eugene is considering, the overall smoking rate is 18 percent, an all-time low.

Social norms around tobacco have dramatically changed thanks to years and years of health promotion and ensuring the expansion of tobacco-free environments. Eugene banned smoking in all workplaces, restaurants and bars in 2005 (and, we were one of the first!). Taking a further stand against tobacco here in Eugene will be good for all smokers and non-smokers, and will contribute to the future health of all Oregonians.

Despite the past downward trend in cigarette smoking rates, tobacco use is still our county's leading cause of death and disease. Our nation continues to rack up $96 billion in direct medical expenses and $97 billion in lost productivity annually due to smoking. Here in Lane County, over $250 million was spent on medical care and lost productivity due to tobacco-related causes in 2013. At any given time in Lane County, there are about 14,000 people ill with a serious tobacco-related disease.

The trends of lives lost, and billions of dollars wasted, needs to stop. By reducing children's exposure to the strong visual cue of other people smoking, they will be less likely to grow up to become life-long smokers. Gallup polls show that almost nine out of every 10 persons who smoke regret having started smoking, and if they could go back in time would choose to never pick up the habit. Every year over half of all people who smoke make at least one attempt to quit. Most do not succeed.

If for no other reason, creating tobacco-free public spaces here in Eugene is a protection our children deserve. It is a challenge to find a balance between protecting the common good while also respecting the individual right to smoke. In July 2015 our community will face change as we adapt to the legalization of marijuana. However, in that smoking matter, the proposed regulations prohibit pot smoking and use in public places — indoors and out. If it's a given that we be protected from marijuana smoke, why should tobacco be treated any differently? ■

FACING TWO ASSAULTS

Is there a more incendiary issue on university campuses than student rape? For victims, effects are devastating. Adding to this misery is widespread failure of university administrators — nationwide — fairly and evenly to address it. Sadly, the UO now has its glaring example. It cynically mishandled the rape allegations of a woman attacked by a pack of athletes. Even worse, it kept or installed rules that seriously would intimidate others from coming forward.

The athletic director, coach of the alleged perpetrators' team, the university president and the subsequent interim president all grievously failed this young woman. Obviously, the crisis extends beyond this university, this group of personnel. But it is also institutional — and it is here we must demand change. Where are our political leaders? This is the time to demand significant reforms, not pledges and lip service. The time to act is now, before other young women are forced to endure not one but two assaults.

TAKE UP ARMS

I have bad PTSD from experiences similar to Laura Hanson: from the assault. I almost lost my eyesight. It was years ago, but I need to join support with Hanson.

The police in that city did not investigate or try to find my attacker. They dumped it completely. I know what it's like to have police detectives sneer and ignore you and get no police or legal support, and they lose the physical evidence.

I learned this the hard way: The police, the law, courts, UO and all responsible institutions don't care or give a s--- about women or what happens to us. And as long as we women don't organize together, arm ourselves and learn how to use handguns, Tasers, etc. and protect ourselves and each other, we will all keep being assaulted, raped and made victims of abuse and murder by men. We have to take control of our own protection or we will never be free

Riverkeeper's Role

WORKING TO PROTECT, RESTORE AND CLEAN UP THE WILLAMETTE

ecently there has been some confusion regarding proposals associated with "riverkeepers" and "river guardians" in Eugene. Willamette Riverkeeper (WR) is a nonprofit organization dedicated to the protection and restoration of the Willamette River. We accomplish this mission through four key initiatives: clean river, monitoring, river discovery education and habitat restoration.

To clarify our work in Lane County, WR organizes the Great Willamette Cleanup, an annual event that happens the first Saturday in October, with volunteers spanning from Oakridge to Portland. This event will be in its 11th year; eight years under the Willamette Riverkeeper banner. We also administer River Guardians, a river-wide monitoring program, in Eugene, spanning the river between the confluence and the Beltline bridge, documenting a variety of river health concerns, including water quality, invasive aquatic weeds, riparian habitat and wildlife observations, and the accumulation of garbage. In tandem with this effort, we work with property owners to remove garbage and debris with organized volunteer cleanup efforts.

We do not approach active camps, provide "notices" or request volunteers to serve as informants on other homeless people; neither have we endorsed any project proposals outside our current programs.

However, we do work with all members of the community to clean the river. During our last cleanup effort, local homeless camp residents volunteered with WR to remove two major dumpsites on ODOT property. WR provided tools, gloves, trash bags, sharps containers and safety oversight. The work was completed in less than two hours, and we provided our volunteers (they did not expect to be paid) a small cash stipend for their efforts, thanks to the generosity of a local supporter.

Garbage and vegetation removal along the riverbanks produces a variety of unique health and safety risks for the entire community — including downstream drinking water contamination and the introduction of hazardous waste to park users, river recreationalists and wildlife. Our volunteers have removed thousands of used needles, household chemicals, paint, propane bottles and gas containers. This garbage is not contained, as it might be in an upland area. The river transports and deposits debris over a much larger landscape, and the destruction of riparian habitat contributes to increased water temperatures, poor stormwater filtration, soil erosion and destruction of important wildlife corridors. Soaring costs to property owners in the Eugene-Springfield area add up to hundreds of thousands of dollars each year, and if garbage is not removed, property owners can be fined even more for not cleaning up affected waterways.

We believe that through a combination of community engagement efforts, the situation along the urban riverfront can be addressed effectively, but we have to start somewhere. Therefore, we are striving to implement prevention, education, accessibility and inclusion as key components of all our programs. As these efforts continue to grow, the money saved by public agencies to clean up areas along the river can eventually be re-directed toward housing and other services to help more homeless people.

River health is not elitist. We all need clean water and we all share a connection to the river, regardless of what kind of shelter we call home.

Michelle Emmons is Lane County advocate for the Portland-based Willamette Riverkeeper. For more information about WR's Eugene-Springfield programs and activities, email emmons@willametteriverkeeper.org.

of this abuse.

That is the only way we will ever be safe on college campuses or anywhere else, even in our homes. The only thing men respect and are deterred by is a genuine show of force, arms to back it up and skill to use them — and the warning that we won't stand for being messed with, without severe consequences.

We have to realize now that we are the only law and order we have.

DECEPTIVE COVER IMAGE

I saw the cover May 28 and thought that this rape thing at UO is getting out of hand. Two guys go out and beat up a young woman and drag her through the mud, back to a dorm or some large building to rape her. Titillating, but I am very much interested in this subject and very interested in women's rights.

So I read the feature article about it, and there was no story to go along with the cover. I don't get it. Obviously, it's a real photo. Did you stage this photo? Are you making this stuff up? The cases you describe in the article did not occur like the cover at all.

What's going on here? Is Eugene Weekly trying to sensationalize the problems at the UO? Have any young women been beaten up and dragged to a hidden place to be raped? C'mon, what gives?

IT'S ABOUT TIME

BY DAVID WAGNER

esting season is coming to a close this month. easilu noticed with geese and turkey nestlings that leave their nests and swim or run right after hatching. One of the enjoyable sights of early summer is watching a troop of goslings or chicks paddling or scurrying around after their parents. They are out feeding for themselves, learning how to find and handle their food by following their parents. Most songbird babies stay in the nest until they are ready to fly. After they fledge and leave the nest, they are pretty much on their own.

The spring flush of flowers has reached its climax in the valley bottoms. Seedpods are developing in all but wetland plants, where flowering and fruiting tends to occur later. The dry seeds of fringe cup are interesting in that they will not germinate in the summer. The seeds have a summer dormancy that prevents them from germinating during occasional rain showers. Otherwise they would dry up and die when the usual summer dry period resumes. Only after midwinter are their seeds ready to sprout.

Most flowers are relatively passive when it comes to courting a pollinator. Bright colors and sweet scents work quite well when bees and butterflies are around. The Scots broom is different in that it acts like a trap for heavy insects like bumble bees. Its stamens are spring-loaded and snap out when the petals are pushed down, slapping a load of pollen on the back of the bee.

SOUTH EUGENE HIGH GRADS TALK DIVERSITY, FUTURE PLANS Black students made up only 2.4 percent of the student body population at South

Black students made up only 2.4 percent of the student body population at South Eugene High School at the beginning of the 2014-2015 school year. Five young African-American women will graduate from South on June 5, and EW caught up with three of them to discuss their plans for the future, their quests for diversity and their advice for young women of color growing up in Eugene.

Mati Chikawa and her family moved to Eugene from Zimbabwe when she was 3 years old. She's a hip-hop dancer and aspiring doctor.

"My big passion is Doctors without Borders," she says, adding that she wrote her senior paper on malnutrition in Africa. "It's something I have a big heart for. People deserve to have food, a home and easy access to hospitals."

She's attending Spelman College in Atlanta, Georgia, next fall, where she'll major in biology with a pre-med option, and she says she's excited to experience the culture of the women's college. Spelman is a historically black college, and Chikawa says she's looking forward to seeing diversity that's lacking in Eugene's predominantly white schools.

Chikawa's classmate. Maya Agapito, is headed for Virginia Commonwealth University next school year, where she plans to study art. In April, she won a gold medal in the painting category during the NAACP Eugene Springfield ACT-SO (Afro-Academic, Cultural, Technological and Scientific Olympics) competition, a yearlong enrichment program, and she says she's explored various art mediums throughout high school.

'It's OK to be different and it's OK to be with people like yourself. A lot of times we try to blend in, and I think you need to be your own person.'

— MATI CHIKAWA

She's also a secretary for the local chapter of the NAACP.

At Virginia Commonwealth, Agapito says, "I want to try animation and media." She says she chose the college because it's the number four arts school in the country, and "it's super diverse, especially compared to here. I think it will give me a lot of choices."

Another classmate, Lena Schulz, says she's excited to start at Loyola University Maryland next fall. During high school, she volunteered at Sacred Heart RiverBend and took a 10-week trip to Ghana to volunteer in an orphanage.

She says she recently began considering political science as a major and may pursue a law degree after her undergraduate studies.

All three girls grew up in Eugene, and Schulz says she encourages young women of color to explore their communities. "Growing up, I was usually one of the only African-American people in the entire school, especially when I was younger," she says.

"It didn't stop me from making a lot of friends, but it's important to branch out. I think it's also important to reach outside of Oregon — I really wanted to go to the East Coast in search of the diversity that's missing here."

Chikawa says it's important for young women of color in Eugene to embrace their differences. "Don't try to fit in," she says. "Just be yourself and do what makes you happy, not what people in our society think you should do. It's OK to be different and it's OK to be with people like yourself. A lot of times we try to blend in, and I think you need to be your own person."

Tiny Tavern at 394 Blair Blvd. in the Whit closed this week after being under new management since January. Jevon Peck took over management after the self-described dive bar was shut down by the Lane County Health Department, but this time the building has reportedly been sold by Jeff Malos. "The owner got an offer he could not refuse and sold the business Saturday," reads a notice on Facebook from Jevon Peck, "and we were informed about it Saturday night and were blindsided by it as well." Peck was hoping to eventually buy Tiny Tavern, but now he is seeking another pub that needs rescue. "We will be looking for a new location for a new endeavor," he says. Email Peck at thetinytavern@gmail.com.

Just heard this week that Cynthia Pappas is retiring as president and CEO of Planned Parenthood of Southwestern Oregon, and the Board of Directors has hired Lisa Gardner, former intergovernmental relations manager for the City Manager's Office in Eugene. Gardner was previously city planning director. Pappas has been head of PPSO for the past nine years.

Karen Rainsong, managing director of the Arts and Business Alliance of Eugene, has left to form a new nonprofit, and the ABAE Board of Directors has hired Barrett Anderson as interim director. Rainsong is now head of Singing Creek Educational Center on 100 acres south of Junction City, which she describes as "the new version of Alvord Farm, the hands-on natural history museum for kids which I did for the past eight years as a hobby." The property, owned by Tom and Sue Hunton, includes a historic one-room schoolhouse build in 1888 that will be used for summer camps. Rainsong can be reached at krainsong@gmail.com or visit singingcreekcenter.org.

Festival of Eugene is planning to return for its second year with dates set for Aug. 21-23 at Skinner Butte Park. A tentative schedule and vendor applications can be found at festivalofeugene.com. One idea being touted by the festival organizers is a return of "Cruising the Gut" on Willamette Street, a bumper-to-bumper weekend night phenomenon dating to the 1950s that was banned in the early 1990s.

DOWNTOWN ASSAULT LEAVES THREE HURT

At approximately 1:30 am on Saturday, May 23, a group of six men attacked two women and one man on the sidewalk in front of Cowfish Dance Club in downtown Eugene.

One of the men in the group punched Jasmyn Hinton in the eye and punched her friend Koen Derflinger in the face three times. The third person in the group — Nicole Foti — says she was hit in the stomach. Hinton, Derflinger and Foti say the six men were white, between the ages of 20 and 25, and looked like "stereotypical college guys."

Some worry that violence like this downtown, with its increase of drinking establishments, is a growing trend, while others argue it's just a normal seasonal increase.

The three say they had left Cowfish and were talking outside when the men started making comments about Hinton's appearance. Hinton is black, but is unsure if her race played a role in their remarks.

"So I walked up to them and was like, 'Hey, I'm a human being. You cannot talk to me like this,'" says Hinton, who works at HIV Alliance with Foti.

The group, Hinton says, then started pushing her and Foti. Hinton and Foti told the men to leave them alone and when they wouldn't, pushed back. Derflinger approached and asked the group to leave.

"When Koen walked up, they punched him in the eye," Hinton says. She explains that she tried to get to Derflinger but others in the group held her back, and then the same man who hit Derflinger punched her in the face, causing her to fall to the ground and lose vision in one eye.

Derflinger, who was also held back, says he was hit in the face at least two more times, but it could have been more as he may have momentarily lost consciousness. He was bleeding profusely, he says, and his blood was "all over" the group of men. "Then they just walked away. I mean, they didn't run. They didn't move fast at all," says Derflinger, who at the time of interview had a gash in his lip and a swollen red right eye. Derflinger and Foti say the group stopped at the southwest corner of Broadway and Willamette to chat with a pedicab driver, who then came over to Hinton, Derflinger and Foti and jokingly asked if they needed a ride before walking away.

After the assault, Foti drove all three to the PeaceHealth Emergency Department on Hilyard. Derflinger received six stitches in his lip and Hinton received steroid eye drops for iritis, caused by the attack.

Hinton and Derflinger reported the assault to Eugene Police Department Officer Matthew Grose on May 24. "He said that we didn't deserve this and it's been happening a

'They know what I look like; I don't know what they look like. I'm not going to go downtown,

not if I don't feel safe,

and I don't.'

lot, and that that area is usually patrolled," Hinton says.

Grose informed them they couldn't press charges because there were no suspects, Hinton and Deflinger say.

"I spoke with our Downtown Team and they have not noted anything unusual for this time of year," EPD Public Information Director Melinda McLaughlin tells EW. "Seasonally, we do see an increase in population downtown, and with that an increase in aggressive behavior. However, the increase is not more than usual for this time. In fact, the bar scene has been better, with no fights for weeks."

Grose did not respond to a request for comment. Hinton and Derflinger say they are avoiding downtown for now.

"I'm not inconspicuous in this town," Hinton says. "I'm basically a moving target now." She adds, "They know what I look like; I don't know what they look like. I'm not going to go downtown, not if I don't feel safe, and I don't."

OREGON LOOKS TO BAN PET DEBARKING, DECLAWING

In the last five years, several states have taken up regulating or banning surgeries to declaw cats or devocalize dogs, also known as "debarking" or ventriculocordectomy.

Now it's Oregon's turn to wrestle with the issue.

Debarking is illegal in Massachusetts and New Jersey. Several California cities, including Los Angeles, have banned declawing outright.

The Oregon Legislature is considering House Bill 3494-A, which would prohibit declawing or devocalizing cats or dogs in Oregon except in the case of "medical necessity" or when efforts to change a pet's behavior have failed.

Many vets have testified or written in support of the bill, but just as many animal rights supporters have gone against it, saying the bill "legitimizes" the procedures. "This bill is not a 'ban' on declawing," writes Carla Hevert, a Eugene resident who submitted testimony, "but an avenue that would actually legitimize the unnecessary practice."

Declawing cats means snipping off the ends of the toe bones to prevent future claw growth. Devocalization or debarking dogs involves removing tissue from the dog's vocal cords by going through the animal's mouth or an incision in the throat. According to Texas A&M University, it can result in scarring that is "severe enough to restrict airflow."

As defined in the current bill, "medically necessary" debarking or declawing can be done to relieve a pet's pain (as in an injury or abnormality where the surgery could help) or because all efforts to stop the behavior have failed (excessive barking or destructive scratching).

Bill sponsor Rep. Brent Barton (D-Gladstone) says, "If this bill passes, Oregon will lead the country in terms of protections for dogs and cats."

He adds, "I'm a softie when it comes to animals, especially cats. It's kind of embarrassing actually."

The Oregon Veterinary Medical Association (OVMA) is neutral on the current bill. It says that the issue should be left to each vet's discretion, and better training for dogs and cats or changing a pet's environment are usually the best options. Regularly trimming cat's nails and certain corrective collars for dogs are other options, according to OVMA.

"This bill started out as stopping landlords from requiring residents declaw their cats," says Sharon Harmon, executive director of the Oregon Humane Society. She says after that failed, "we all started thinking about a broader change in the state law."

Though the Oregon Humane Society supports HB 3494, Harmon says the legislation is moving faster than the education. "Many people don't understand that declawing isn't clipping nails, it's an amputation," she says. "But a lot of people have no idea and love their cats and don't think they're harming them."

HB 3494-A must pass out of the Senate Committee on Human Services and Early Childhood June 4 or die. — Dash Paulson

BIKE TOUR CELEBRATES WEST EUGENE WETLANDS

Sunny skies are predicted for this weekend: Hop on your bike and get outside June 6 at the upcoming Love Your West Eugene Wetlands Bike Tour, presented by Beyond Toxics and Mountain Rose Herbs.

The tour begins at Mountain Rose Herbs and takes a 4.8-mile route along the Fern Ridge Bike Path as well as other bike routes. The tour will lead into the We Are Bethel: Drawn Together community celebration located at Petersen Barn.

The bike tour was created as a way to celebrate the wetlands, according to Joel Iboa, environmental justice and community outreach manager for Beyond Toxics.

"At one point the whole area was wetlands," Iboa says. And despite the already heavy industrial presence and the specter of additional pollution, he says that 624 additional acres are slated for future industrial use.

Beyond Toxics has a "different vision" for those 624 acres, Iboa says.

Despite the industrial encroachment, beavers, river otters and the endangered Fender's blue butterfly all call the West Eugene wetlands home, according to the city of Eugene's website.

The We Are Bethel community celebration, where the tour ends, will include a quarter (25¢) carnival, artwork and performances by The Dance Factory as well as the Willamette High School Dance Team.

"We are thrilled about this opportunity to perform for the Bethel Area," Roshny Bhakta, head coach of the Willamette High School Dance Team and coach at The Dance Factory, tells EW via email. "We are excited to be back and to perform for a crowd that doesn't always get to see us out in the community."

Both events are free. The bike tour starts at 10 am Saturday, June 6, at Mountain Rose Herbs, 4020 Steward Road. Loaner bicycles and helmets may be available. Call 465-8860 to inquire.

The We Are Bethel celebration runs from noon to 6 pm Saturday, June 6, at Petersen Barn, 870 Berntzen Road. Call 682-5521 for details. — Mike Bivins

POLLUTION UPDATE

Back in June of 2014, Oregon Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) hit Pacific Recycling with a $327,686 penalty for repeatedly discharging harmful levels of industrial pollutants to waters of the state and failing to install a treatment system in 2011 as it had promised to do. DEQ reduced the penaltu to $47,494 in January and issued an order requiring Pacific Recycling to install its treatment system by Jan. 16; Pacific Recycling agreed to pay a penalty of $283,157 if it failed to meet this deadline. Pacific Recycling missed the deadline. DEQ has again let Pacific Recycling off the hook, instead imposing a penalty of $11,600 for the latest missed deadline, and giving Pacific Recycling until June 30 to install the treatment system. Pacific Recycling has now agreed to pay the $283,157 penalty if they miss the new deadline. For the penalties that Pacific Recycling has actually agreed to pay at this point ($47,494 plus $11,600), DEQ has come up with a payment plan allowing Pacific Recycling to pay $980 per month through July of 2021.

DEQ is accepting comments through 5 pm Friday, June 5, on Pacific Recycling's application for Clean Water Act stormwater permit coverage for its stormwater discharges. Visit goo.gl/iMDQb for information on commenting. Pacific Recycling's stormwater discharges have taken place pursuant to an expired permit since July 1, 2012.

DEQ is also accepting comments through 5 pm Wednesday, June 10, on Fam-Lee, LLC's application for a Clean Water Act construction stormwater permit for its Addyson Creek project on River Road. Visit goo.gl/HcPy8 for more information on commenting.

SLANT

- This week marks a changing of the guard at The Register-Guard, and outgoing Editor and Publisher Tony Baker wrote a farewell column in the daily's Sunday Commentary section May 31. The column was clearly intended to diminish fears that new Editor and Publisher N. Christian Anderson III will oversee the kinds of changes at the R-G that he and the Advance Publications chain implemented at The Oregonian, taking the venerable Oregon daily and turning it into a pitiful tabloid. Baker's column ominously cited "difficult cultural and operational change" in the works. He did commit to "strong local reporting and editorial commentary" and said a daily printed version of the R-G will "be around for years to come." But how many years? Tony Baker suggested that Anderson is really only a bridge until another Baker is in charge. Does that mean he has been brought here to cut staff, bust the union, restore profits? We shall see.
- Overworked reporters at the Corvallis Gazette-Times counted more empty newsroom desks when they returned to work this week. Last Friday, G-T parent company Lee Enterprises announced major staff cuts at the Corvallis daily that cut awfully close to the bone. Lee management eliminated City Editor Theresa Novak, as well as Entertainment Editor Sarah Payne. Until Friday, Novak and Payne were two of the paper's few full-time editors. Sources at the G-T say the burden of Novak's and Payne's editorial responsibilities will be spread around the newsroom to the remaining survivors who aren't likely to see any additional pay. Lee also laid off reporters, editors and photographers at the Albany Democrat-Herald and the Lebanon Express. "Regardless of any staffing changes, we remain committed to serving our readers in the Mid-Valley," G-T Publisher Jeff Precourt says. Serving them what, we wonder.
- Commissioner Jay Bozievich is trying to shore up his right-wing credentials with a resolution before the Lane County Board of Commissioners backing Second Amendment rights. It's a reaction to Sen. Floyd Prozanski's Senate Bill 941, signed into law earlier this month, requiring background checks on private gun sales between a buyer and seller. The county resolution, which passed, 4-1, has no teeth but opposes SB 941, saying the county can't pay for it.

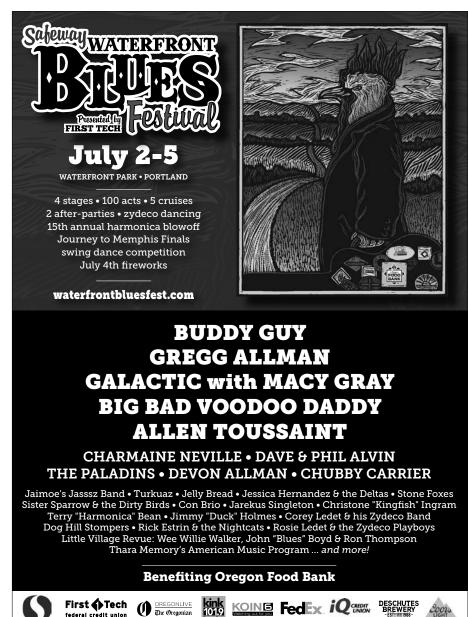

In February, Boz got called out for flip-flopping by the rabidly pro-gun rights Oregon Firearms Federation for bringing up a pro-gun resolution, then dropping it.

In April, he flip-flopped again, writing a letter to the Legislature's Senate Judiciary Committee saying he opposed the background check measure unless it was amended to destroy records from background checks, comparing the system to Nazi Germany.

Weirdly, we do agree with one thing the Firearms Federation had to say about Boz — "Lane County needs commissioners who are not so disconnected from reality."

- "The numbers are bad here." That sums up juvenile Judge Valeri Love's talk to the City Club of Eugene on May 29 about juvenile justice problems in Lane County. Kids in foster care, abused kids, sex-trafficked kids, no local shelter, neglected older kids. Really bad numbers. Some vital help comes from Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA), volunteers who step up to help these kids, as described by Megan Shultz, director, and Terry Brodkorb, caseworker for the Oregon Department of Human Services. If you dare to put our local situation into a national context, read Robert Putnam's new book Our Kids. Best known for Bowling Alone, Putnam documents the widening class-based opportunity gap among young people. Subtitled The American Dream in Crisis, this important book should activate us all, at the very least sending us to volunteer for CASA, see casalane.org or call 984-3132.
- A public forum on Eugene's Multi-Unit Property Tax Exemption (MUPTE) is Monday, June 8 (see Activist Alert), and the forum panel appears heavily weighted toward maintaining the status quo. It's not an official city forum or hearing. The event notice sent out by Downtown Eugene Economic Development (DEED) quotes and disputes the statement EW made in Slant Jan. 22 that "MUPTE should be written off as a failed experiment in urban planning." DEED instead claims the 10-year property tax breaks have "played an important role in contributing to downtown's recent revitalization." Well, maybe to a small degree, but advocates for MUPTE don't mention diverting millions in tax revenues away from public schools and city services to boost the profits of millionaire developers. They don't mention all the housing projects built without MUPTE, nor do they point out the concrete atrocity of Capstone's 13th and Olive student housing project that qualified for MUPTE with obviously minimal design requirements. MUPTE has outlived whatever usefulness it had as a planning tool, but it looks like it will continue. Will the new MUPTE include meaningful restrictions, or will developers simply continue to build whatever suits their bottom line?

These FREE fun-for-all ages events open up the streets of Downtown Eugene and Friendly neighborhoods to walking, biking, and rolling in a car-free environment between activity centers and entertainment in city parks.

FLYING HIGH

Catch the breeze at Oregon's summer kite festivals

efore Connor Doran's indoor kite-flying performances were wowing television audiences on season five of NBC's America's Got Talent, he was tearing up the skies on the beach at Lincoln City's annual Summer Kite Festival. "It's where I started out," Doran says, who will perform at the next iteration of the annual kite festival in late June alongside a host of other champion kite fliers.

Though pros like Doran make it look easy, kite flying can be challenging. A video on YouTube with over 85,000 hits called "How Not to Power Kite — Lincoln City, Oregon" shows a man literally being dragged all over the beach by his kite. Even Doran, who flies six kites at once, has to watch the wind or he'll "get yanked," he says.

Summertime on the Oregon coast means turbulent winds with fewer storms and even the occasional sunny sky. The beach is an ideal location to let your kite soar, and two upcoming annual kite festivals present opportunities for experts and amateurs alike.

"You don't have to be an invited performer to fly," Doran says of the Lincoln City festival, though the performance area for invited kite fliers will be clearly marked. A 22-year-old native of Flint, Michigan, Doran currently lives in Olympia, Washington, but grew up in Bend and has been flying kites for about eight years.

"It's a great place to start out when you're first flying, since there's a bunch of people who will be willing to work with you if you ask nicely," he adds.

Doran says he enjoys kite flying for the escape it provides from life's troubles. He's used his kite-flying fame as a platform to advocate for others living with epilepsy, as well as making a stand against bullying. "It's very therapeutic [for] the stress I have to deal with in real life," Doran says. "I just like what it has done to me, and I like the people. We're like one big family."

Though Doran will not be performing one of his signature indoor kite-flying routines in Lincoln City, you can get a taste of indoor kite flying in July at the 23rd annual Southern Oregon Kite Festival (SOKF) in Brookings, Oregon. This will be the second year indoor kite flying, which uses specially designed kites, will be featured at the SOKF.

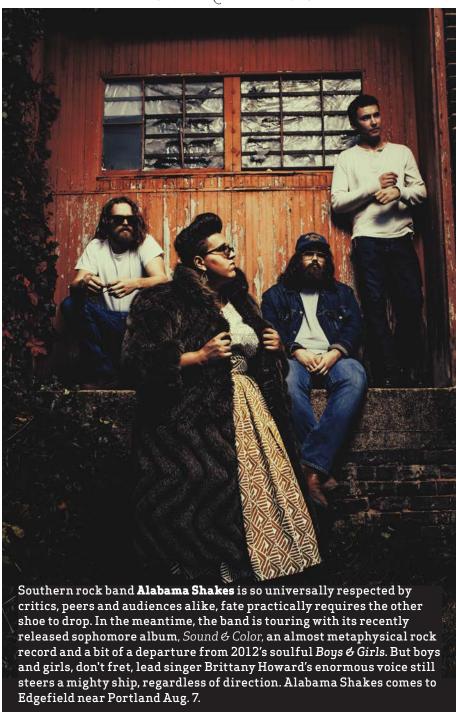

Indoor kite flying and its lack of wind can be mystifying to observe. "People will ask me, 'How do they fly indoors?' I kinda shake my head and say, 'You should just come and watch,'" says SOKF committee member Mike Macdonald, who also got his start kite flying on the beach in Lincoln City, though in the 1970s.

Along with professional indoor and outdoor kite-flying demonstrations, kids will be able to make kites and then go on a kite parade with their creations. "It's not the oldest, or the biggest, but it's the best kite festival," Macdonald says, and "while our field is very small, what we do is put on a nonstop show, so there is always someone performing." — Mike Bivins

The Lincoln City Kite Festival is held June 27-28 at the D-River Wayside. Admission is free. More information can be found at oregoncoast.org.

The indoor portion of the Southern Oregon Kite Festival will be held 7 pm Friday, July 17, at the Brookings Harbor High School gymnasium, while the outdoor portion will be held July 18-19 near the Port of Brookings. Admission is free. More information plus directions can be found at sokf.org.

ewspapers aren't dead (ahem, you are reading one). They've just been repurposed. Case in point: Turn to the cover of this issue and find the peacock-like ensemble Ariana Schwartz custom-crafted for EW's 2015 Summer Guide.

Look closely — Schwartz used EW's recent Big Bird cover story to create the summery getup.

"There is a lineage," Schwartz says. Sitting in a sunny LCC classroom overlooking the downtown bus station, Schwartz chats about the trend of disposable paper clothing in the '60s and the iconic 1967 shot of mod-era supermodel Twiggy modeling a newspaper dress. "It has a lot of potential to be accessible to students."

Schwartz teaches ReFashionLab, a new continuing education class at LCC that launched fall of 2014. The class is sponsored by Materials Exchange Center for Community Arts (MECCA) and, last term, Schwartz advised a handful of students how to make designs from recycled material, or how to "transform everyday objects into wearable art."

Among other found objects, Schwartz gathered back issues of Eugene Weekly. "Some were more skeptical," she says of the students. But, "they realized it was easy to create texture and shape with newspaper."

The results are impressive. Students used the unforgiving material to make dresses featuring eyelet lace, bustiers, pleats, ruffles and even some chic adornments on a pair of heels. The students will present the designs, which will be modeled during the First Friday ArtWalk June 5 at Studio Mantra Salon.

The ReFashionLab is part of a reboot that LCC started last fall for its continuing education fashion, $textile \, and \, costume \, courses. \, Registration \, opens \,$ June 9 for a slew of summer courses taught by Schwartz and Anna Szmit. In addition to the lab, classes include: Fashion Design and Illustration, Creative Fabric Design: Fabric Painting for Designers and Crafters, Creative Fashionista: Day Camp for Tweens and Teens and Kiddies Knitting Day Camp.

Schwartz notes that courses in coming terms will continue to evolve depending on demand and necessity. Eventually, she would like to add sewing and pattern-making courses.

"Fashion is coming into itself in Oregon," Schwartz says, pointing out the growth of Eugene Fashion Week, Portland Fashion Week and Oregon State University's apparel design program, as well as the rise of local indie designers made possible by outlets like the e-commerce site Etsy. "It's a great moment for there to be resources in the city."

Schwartz, a Eugene native, brings a lifetime of experience to her instruction. As a little kid, she dabbled in design with her dolls, and she was surrounded by textiles and belly dancing costumes from her parents' local import business. She learned to sew at 6 from retired sewing teacher Liz Deck (the 1992 SLUG queen), whom she calls a Eugene institution.

And Schwartz has racked up several design degrees: a BFA in fiber arts from the UO, an associate degree in applied science in fashion design from New York's Fashion Institute of Technology and an MFA in costume design from University of Texas.

But, she says, "there's no fashion program in Eugene."

The continuing education courses, while not a degree program, are meant to help students interested in pursuing careers in fashion and design "develop portfolios for design schools."

Or, she says, you can just take courses for fun, as is local multimedia artist Lori Macedone, who's currently enrolled in the ReFashionLab.

"I've always been a recycler, which I learned from my mom," Macedone says. She saw an announcement for the class through a "snail-mail" flier from LCC. "ReFashionLab — this is what I need," she savs.

Macedone will have several designs from class on display for First Friday ArtWalk, including a flapper-style dress made from a chain-link silhouette and vintage pastel-colored hair rollers she had collected, and a pencil skirt and crop top created entirely from shirt collars sourced from MECCA provides materials for the course, and it gives each student a $10 voucher to buy additional supplies at the MECCA store.

'We receive an overwhelming amount of donations from the community," say Katey Finley, MECCA's material exchange manager. "Fabric and sewing stuff in particular was beginning to build up to a ridiculous degree."

After hearing about ReFashionLab and the course's emphasis on upcycling materials, Finley says she reached out to LCC and Schwartz, who she calls a "creative genius."

Finley adds, "It turned out to be this really perfect fit beyond what I even thought."

In addition to MECCA materials, the downtown LCC classroom houses 18 sewing machines and four large fabric-cutting tables. Schwartz says as the program grows, they will add more equipment and build more community relationships — currently, she's trying to partner students with downtown shops to help create art ensembles for storefronts.

The Eugene art scene is blossoming," she says. – Alex V. Cipolle ReFashionLab designs will be modeled on the second stop of the First Friday ArtWalk at 6 pm Friday, June 5, at Studio Mantra, 40 E. 5th Ave. The summer 2015 LCC fashion, textile and costume classes start at the end of June and throughout July. For more info, visit lanecc.

EXTREME GOLFING

Cruise up to the green with GolfBoarding

olfing is to sports what masturbation is to sex — a solitary endeavor that, no matter how vigorously you go at it, always ends up being about you and you alone, as you come face to face with your own failings in the universe as well as the measure of your stamina in overcoming them.

I've been golfing, more or less vigorously, for years, and I'm sad to report that my game hasn't improved one jot. It's an existential dilemma. Golf, for me, is too often a good walk spoiled, just like people think Mark Twain said.

So why walk?

A radical new innovation springing from the soil of the Northwest has the potential to revolutionize the way the game of golf is played. Enter the GolfBoard, an elegant little electronic scooter that allows the solitary golfer to zip around the course Jetsons-style at speeds of up to 14 miles per hour.

Conceived and designed by Bally's
Total Fitness founder Don Wildman in collaboration with legendary surfer
Laird Hamilton, and manufactured in Bend,
Oregon, the GolfBoard is gaining popularity among amateur golfers, both locally and across the country. At Trysting Tree Golf Course in Corvallis — the nearest place to Eugene offering the things — players are increasingly moving from the old, slow golf carts to GolfBoards.

I had the occasion to watch a couple of players at Trysting Tree, Pat Serry and Mark McRae, use the boards, and let me tell you, they're pretty cool. Unlike the more lugubrious, old-fashioned covered carts, GolfBoards allow golfers to directly follow their shot as they motor in a direct line over the topography, carving into inclines and zooming down hills.

"They're gonna take off," Serry says about the board's popularity, adding that he'd recently golfed 36 holes in just over four-and-a-half hours (a board-less round of 18 typically takes between three and five hours). Speed of play, combined with the low-impact footprint on the course, are significant factors in the device's attraction.

According to Trysting Tree golf pro Sean Arey, the appeal of the GolfBoard is that it brings two sports in line, attracting both golfers and adventure enthusiasts who enjoy sports like surfing and skateboarding. "Golf is a game that has to grow and evolve," Arey says, noting that the board is bringing back younger players, including Gen Xers who may have abandoned the game over the past decade.

And yet, Arey adds, the average age of the players renting boards at Trysting Tree is 40 to 45. "As it is, the Golf Board has been accepted by all demographics and all generations," he says, and the board has over 100,000 views on YouTube. "I hope this brings a spark to the game."

Jordan Greenbaum, the regional director for GolfBoard based in Bend, says that the board is bringing a "wow factor" to the traditional game. "We're putting in fleets of orders all across the country," Greenbaum says, though he notes that Oregon, with its weather and landscape, represents a particular "hot spot" for what might come to be known

 $as\,golf boarding.\$

"I see it becoming much more mainstream," he says. "It already is. People are discovering how fun it is." — Rick Levin

You can try out the GolfBoard at Trysting Tree in Corvallis (trystingtree.com; 752-3332), where a round plus rental ($25 per board) will run you $64.

PARTY WITH THE STARS

The Eugene Astronomical Society is always looking up or 25 years, the Hubble Space Telescope has captured images of astronomic wonders - nebulae, galaxies, star ${\tt clusters-that\,exist\,millions\,of\,light}$ years away from Earth. These pictures are spectacular, but for members of the Eugene $\,$ Astronomical Society, there's nothing quite like looking at the night sky with their own eyes.

"Seeing a fuzzy little image of Saturn through a metal tube with a couple hunks of glass and having those photons smack you right in the eyeball — it's more life changing than seeing the incredible photos you might see from the Hubble Telescope," explains Bruce Hindrichs, a Eugene Astronomical Society (EAS) member.

Every month (weather depending), stargazers from EAS crowd around telescopes on top of College Hill Reservoir and peer up at the sparkling array of heavenly bodies that litter the sky. If skies are cloudy, EAS tries again the next night.

Open to the public, star parties are the society's way of sharing its knowledge and telescopes with the rest of Eugene.

Cloud cover is less frequent in the summer, says Kathy Oltion, an EAS member, and though late sunsets mean star parties can't start until 9 pm. clear summer skies make for easier informal astronomy. On a recent Friday night, amateur astronomers could see the Sombrero Galaxy, the reddish gas giant Jupiter and four of its moons, Venus, our own moon and a double star, all through EAS member Jerry Oltion's

"A lot of us build our own telescopes," Jerry Oltion says, "and the joy of seeing something with the naked eye is magnified even more when it's with a telescope you've built yourself. There's something about knowing that you put in the hours into building this thing and now you're looking at Jupiter or Saturn with it."

But you don't have to build your own telescope to enjoy the benefits of the astronomy club, the Oltions sav.

"If you've got a new telescope and you don't know how to use it, show up at the star party, and there will be someone there who will help you," Hindrichs says.

EAS members also explore astrophotography, or taking pictures of celestial objects. EAS member Bill Basham says photography led him to astronomy: After experimenting with time-lapse photographs of sunsets, he waited until nightfall and captured images of the Milky Way galaxy. "Getting good pictures through the telescope is my goal right now," Basham says.

The Milky Way, the galaxy in which our solar system is located, looks particularly vibrant during the summer, Basham says, and globular clusters, or round collections of stars, also dazzle during summer months.

Since the night sky changes throughout the year as the Earth charts its course around the sun, every month brings something new to look at, Jerry Oltion says. EAS member Bob Andersen, a retired math professor, says he enjoys looking at summer constellations sans telescope and lists Cygnus the Swan as his favorite.

Several nearby astronomy events take place during the summer as well, including the Eugene Astronomical Society's Dark Sky Star Party in Dexter on July 11. Fifteen miles southeast of Eugene, Dexter provides an escape from the bright lights of the city and offers unimpaired celestial viewing. Jerry Oltion says the event includes a raffle for young astronomers ages 8 to 18, affording them a chance to win their very own telescope.

On an even grander scale, the Oregon Star Party Aug. 11-16 in Central Oregon features a weeklong stargazing fest with speakers, camping and lots of telescopes. - Amy Schneider

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Every grade school classroom has its rambunctious weirdo. But have you ever wondered what happens to that kid when he/she grows up? Maybe the very weird don't out-grow it. Maybe they stay weird, finish school, move to Eugene and join the off-the-wall No Shame Theatre group. Expect the unexpected this Friday when No Shame Eugene celebrates its sixth birthday with a performance at the downtown Atrium Building. No Shamers live by three simple rules: performances must be short, original and no breaking shit. Other than that, pretty much anything goes. No Shame Eugene's 6th Anniversary Performance features 15 five-minute original acts. "It's chaos. It's fun. It's kind of like putting together a mixtape," says No Shame Eugene's artistic director Jeff Geiger.

No Shame Eugene's 6th Anniversary Performance begins at 7:30pm Friday, at the Atrium Building, 99 W. 10th Ave.; FREE.

Springfield Creamery * Family Owned & Operated since 1960 * Eugene, Oregon

The history is a little spotty. But for about as long as cigars have come in small boxes, people have been turning those boxes into guitars. We're talking maybe 200 years of cigar box music. It's enough to lift one's spirit with hope for mankind, even if just a little. The Saturday Market Stage is set to host the second annual Cigar Box Guitar Fest Northwest this weekend. This year's cigar box guitar party includes performances by cigar box blues musicians, rock bands and virtuosic shredders. "We've never dedicated most of a Market Stage day to one musical theme before," says Saturday Market promotional manager Kim Still, "but it makes perfect sense to highlight handmade instruments at our handcrafted market." The beauty — aside from the signature cigar box guitar sound — is they're cheap and you don't need to be an accomplished luthier to make one. Check out the show, then make your own.

Cigar Box Guitar Fest Northwest kicks of at 10am Saturday at Market Stage downtown; see our calendar for a full list of performers and times, FREE.

TOO CLOSE TO THE SUN

Sunshine Superman tells the story of BASE-jumping founder Carl Boenish

fine and fascinating new documentary, Sunshine Superman provides an intimate portrait of the founder of a movement in which participants — perhaps I should say followers — commit protracted suicide in circus-like gestures that are public and grandiose and defiantly illegal. And for these gestures they are widely heralded as free-spirited heroes whose failed attempts to burst the bonds of human limitation are considered tragic evidence of their own greatness.

I'm speaking, of course, about the extreme sport of BASE-jumping, and in particular its "father" and earliest proponent, Carl Boenish. Directed by Marah Strauch, Sunshine Superman hones in close to Boenish, a preternaturally smiley fellow whose Peter Pan-ish disposition seems to have run a tight gamut between manic and ecstatic.

Thanks to a veritable treasure trove of archival footage from the '70s and '80s, the film traces the evolution of Boenish's thrill-seeking, as he and his crew - including his comparatively level-headed wife, Jean Boenish — hatch the idea that jumping with a parachute from buildings, aerial antennae, spans (bridges) and earth (cliffs) seems like a

Yes, I do think it's a lovely, inspiring thing when a human being confronts fear and attempts to overcome obstacles, often self-imposed, but I fail to see how courting selfdestruction as a flamboyant career choice qualifies as a heroic pursuit. After watching Sunshine Superman — which, make no mistake, is a very well-made if misguided documentary — I'm calling bullshit on Boenish and his ilk, which includes Dean Potter, who last month slammed into a hunk of granite in California's Yosemite Valley while sailing in a squirrel suit.

Call it the law of unintended consequences, but what Sunshine Superman makes abundantly clear is that extreme sports like BASE-jumping represent a particularly insidious form of addiction. Like all addicts, BASE jumpers get gacked out on their drug of choice (adrenaline) to such an extent that each high must be higher, simply to combat the drudgery of regular old life. But it's a false dichotomy, this idea that everyday existence is so drab that one must constantly seek manufactured states of consciousness in order to feel alive.

The circumstances of Boenish's death, so excruciatingly and disturbingly laid out, offer an enlightening glimpse into the narcissistic self-delusions and death-wishing that drives adrenaline junkies. It's difficult to conclude, after hearing the testimony of his wife as well as those he dragged along on his quest, that Boenish's death was anything other than suicide.

In this regard, Sunshine Superman recalls a pair of cautionary tales about the sick man's quest for self-actualization, one recent and one very, very old: the myth of Icarus and Werner Herzog's Grizzly Man, both of which had plenty of sunshine but nothing all that super about them. ■

IRIS

In the celebrated tradition of fashion documentaries comes IRIS, a fantastic study of 93-yearold entrepreneur, interior designer and fashion icon Iris Apfel, one of those rare birds who elevates personal style to an art form. Apfel is in good hands here; Albert Maysles, 88, deftly acts as cinematographer and director, as he did for Grey Gardens (Maysles passed away in March). He wastes no time uncovering the crux of the film — the beauty of individuality, an intangible essence that cannot be bought off the runway or gained through plastic surgeru. Despite operating in the upper echelons of society, there's nothing haughty or contrived about Apfel. In her warm but candid manner, Apfel notes, "I don't happen to like pretty. Most of the world isn't with me, but I don't care." After seeing this film, its easy to imagine most of the world is with Apfel — and we're waiting to see what she wears next. [Bijou Metro]

Welcome to Me

In this new dark comedy directed by Shira Piven, Kristin Wiig stars as Alice, a woman with borderline personality order who hits the lottery for $87 million, gets off her meds and — channeling her love of all things Oprah — decides to buy her own talk show. But unlike Oprah, whose monstrous narcissism hides behind a glittery sheen of benevolence, Alice wants her show to be about nothing but her - including her petty resentments (or, as Alice puts it in a show segment, "Who's a cunt?"), her fights with her mom, her latest attempts to selfmedicate through food. Her on-air revelations are by turns carnal and banal, grotesque and infantile, piquant and pissy. Like any trainwreck, the spectacle of Alice gains an audience. In the end, it is Wiig who brings it all together, elevating an otherwise good film into something truly fine. Wiig is a force of nature, and she's found perhaps the most apt vehicle yet for her considerable talents in Welcome to Me. (Bijou Metro)

OREGON LEGISLATORS, PROTECT PEOPLE NOT POLLUTERS

Logging operations in Oregon use helicopters to spray toxic weed killers and other chemicals under some of the weakest rules in the Northwest. Imagine if one flew over your home or child's school, spraying chemicals with no warning. This nightmare is a reality for many families living in rural Oregon. Worse, it is almost impossible for private citizens-or their doctors-to get logging operations to turn over information on what they were exposed to. Despite promises to protect Oregonians from toxic chemicals, legislators have given logging and chemical lobbyists the power to veto any meaningful reform. This is unacceptable!

ECSTASY AND OFFSPRING

urists may shudder, but musical miscegenation has always been the rule. "Enjoy hybrid music, because that's all there is," Oregon-born composer Lou Harrison often said. Regarded as the godfather of what became the world music movement, Harrison typically expressed this sentiment before demonstrating how just about every form of music emerges from encounters with the sounds of other cultures and times.

Technology (from records to MP3s) and the growing ease of global travel have only brought various music forms together, where they've rubbed up against each other with predictable results: first ecstasy, then offspring. A handful of such musical hybrids hit

The electro-acoustic duo $\mbox{\bf Dirtwire},$ which brings its pulsating mix of musical influences to HiFi Music Hall 9 pm Thursday, June 4, is actually a hybrid of hybrids. David Satori (violin, guitar, banjo, piano, percussion) hails from the Bay Area's Beats Antique, which concocted a Middle Eastern-tinged fusion of glitched-out electronica, dubstep-laden world beat and pop sounds.

Satori actually met Dirtwire's other half, Evan Fraser, when both were studying world music composition at Cal Arts. Fraser (piano, percussion, guitar, harmonica) went on to join both Hamsa Lilla (which fused hippie spaciness, funk and world music, particularly Moroccan and Caribbean trance grooves) and Stellamara.

With all those influences — and instruments — you'd think Dirtwire would have enough musical ammunition but they've also added some rootsy-bluesy Americana elements. Somehow the mashup works, much of the time, even if it's neither possible nor desirable to pigeonhole.

Born of African, Caribbean and European musical influences, jazz is an old-school musical hybrid. Saxophonist Tom Bergeron has long been one of the area's top jazzers, but in the past decade or so he's focused on the music of Brazil, itself a culture that mixes African, American and European ancestry, as does much of its music.

At 8 pm Friday, June 5, at The Jazz Station (and on Thursday, June 4, at Salem's Christo's restaurant), Bergeron leads his bubbly Brasil Band through their bountiful blend of various Brazilian styles, including samba, bossa nova, frevo, jazz and choro, the century old Brazilian mélange of African rhythms, European harmonies and South American styles that is the Brazilian analog of North American jazz.

The shows also include São Paulo's Choro Das 3, a family band making its third U.S. tour with an instrumental palette that includes flute, piccolo, mandolin, banjo, pandeiro tambourine and more. After separate sets, the two bands will play together — another multi-musical mashup. Like the man said, that's all there is.

Speaking of musical miscellany, if you head over to the University of Oregon this weekend, you can catch a variety of musical styles in concert. At 7:30 pm Thursday, June 4, at Beall Concert Hall, the Navy Band Northwest Chamber Winds play wind serenades by Mozart and Beethoven. Student chamber ensembles perform Debussy, Beethoven and works by the wild Stanford composer Mark Applebaum noon Friday, June 5. in a free show at the Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art.

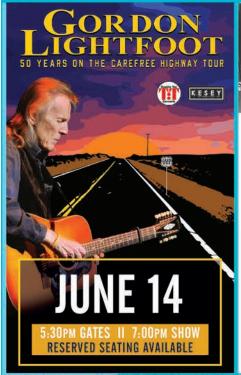

In another free show, the UO Green and Yellow Garter Bands (familiar from their appearances at Ducks games) play jazz and pop at 7 pm Saturday, June 6, at WOW Hall. Also on Saturday at 7:30 pm at Beall, you can hear the UO Repertoire Singers, University Singers and Chamber Choir, which just placed second in the Marktoberdorf International Chamber Choir Competition, a major European choral music festival. Congrats! ■

Had Yelawolf never elevated his game beyond the flush of his furious 2010 mixtape Trunk Muzik, which contained at least one bona-fide masterpiece in "Pop the Trunk," he'd yet remain a significant footnote in the history of modern hip hop — an Alabama-born rapper of manic intensity and talent who gnawed his initials into the rusty proud husk of Southern culture on the skids of the 21st century.

And with one foot in the door, and other in the gutter, Yela's major label debut on Interscope, 2011's Radioactive, caught the artist stillborn in an outfit that didn't fit — some prefab peacock spittin' syllables across scratched tracks for a TRL crowd long dispersed.

Really, it's an age-old story: prodigal son turns heads, flirts with fame, wanders into faulty expectations and gets lost. More than a few promising careers end here (footnotes), but not so for Yelawolf. Instead, he blew it up; he kicked that door open and brought the gutter with him.

On 2015's Love Story — which features the brilliant single "Till It's Gone," a sort of gothic swamp-rat sequel to "Pop the Trunk" — Yelawolf has re-embraced his "Slumerican" roots, returning to a native soil that resembles some post-apocalyptic revamping of Faulkner's Yoknapatawpha County, where whiskey and meth, pride and loss, guitars and guns vie for the souls of the beloved and dispossessed.

"Man, it's funny," Yelawolf told me during his November stop at WOW Hall. "It's like, yeah, I'm probably closer to my 10-year-old, still-in-Alabama-country self than I ever have been. I just feel comfortable, man ... it's kind of like

That comfort is evident all across Love Story, from the infectious anthem of "American You" to the bluesy lament of "Devil in My Veins" to the frenetic self-actualization of "Fiddle Me This." Let us not talk hip hop; this is a pop album, and one that bends and blends genres into something as new and southern-drenched as R.E.M.'s 1983 debut.

Yelawolf's "The Love Story: Chapter 1" tour, with Hillbilly Casino, starts 9 pm Friday, June 5, at McDonald Theatre; $20 adv., $25 door. All ages. — Rick Levin

METAL GIANTS OF THE PNW

The Northwest metal scene is rife with stoner, doom and black metal stereotypes thick enough to choke out the sun. Still there are a precious few acts that transcend, escaping the mire to unfurl like wildflowers springing from the thorniest of thickets. Amongst these are local favorites Agalloch and Yob, in many ways kindred spirits, though vastly dissimilar in sound.

Forming here in Eugene in 1996, Yob draws from such disparate influences as the subtle, soft prog of Pink Floyd and the genre-defying metal alchemy of Neurosis. Led by guitarist and vocalist Mike Scheidt, the trio of hometown heroes has crafted a unique and epic brand of doom that has taken them around the globe, influencing a whole new era of metalheads, opening for the likes of Tool and landing atop Rolling Stone's "20 Best Metal Albums of 2014" with their seventh full-length LP, Clearing the Path to Ascend.

Portland's Agalloch possesses an expansive network of roots, drawing creative sustenance from black metal, folk, prog and post-rock in nearly equal proportions. Utilizing a keen understanding of dynamics and a willingness to allow an album to unfold slowly, the four piece paints a sonic landscape with such breadth that it appeals not only connoisseurs of heavy music but to listeners of many other stylistic bents as well.

It is no coincidence that these two Northwest metal giants are sharing a stage. It's not the first time. "We played our first gig opening for [Yob] and have a lot of respect for them and certainly share an artistic camaraderie with them," Agalloch frontman John Haughm says. The two bands have been planning to converge at WOW Hall since 2012, but schedules were consistently an issue. "We really made a point to finally make it happen for this tour."

Somehow, despite mercurial retrograde, the stars have finally aligned in the correct unholy formation to bring these two monolithic acts together, resulting in a night we'll not soon forget. Throw up some horns, Eugene.

Catch Agalloch, Yob and Italian psych-metal band Ufomammut at 8:30 pm Friday, June 5, at WOW Hall; $13 adv., $15 door. All Ages. — Joshua Isaac Finch

WIDE OPEN SPACES

Originally from Wainfleet, Ontario, neo-folk quintet Great Lake Swimmers play music as idyllic as their scenic rural hometown.
Frontman Tony Dekker's light, sweet voice and melody-driven songwriting is partnered with familiar bluegrass backing instruments: acoustic guitar, banjo, upright bass and violin.

Dekker tells $\mathcal{E}W$, though, that "as a group, we have a deep respect for the folk tradition, but I wouldn't exactly call us a traditional folk band."

One of the Great Lake Swimmers' trademarks, in fact, is their aptitude for switching up instrumentation while retaining the aesthetic and feeling of folk. While their first few full-length albums were crafted from a bare acoustic song structure with pastoral track names like "I Saw You in the Wild," newer albums such as the April 21 release A Forest of Arms include electric guitar and rock-style drumbeats.

Experimentation goes even beyond instruments; several tracks on A Forest of Arms were recorded in the Tyendinaga Caves and Caverns of Ontario, lending the record an overarching airiness.

"If you line up all six of the albums, there is a through-line ... I think of the new album as being part of that continuum or arc," Dekker says.
"That being said, when we were getting ready to record A Forest Of Arms, there was a focus on the rhythm section."

Ironically, Dekker says his favorite track from the new album (and the one that seems to resonate most with live audiences) is "Don't Leave Me Hanging," a straight-ahead ballad steeped in sincerity.

"It's one of the quieter ballads in the set and on the new album, and seems to really stop people in their tracks," Dekker says, noting it is gratifying to him because "it's the song on the album that I think I spent the most amount of time on."

Fellow Canucks The Weather Station join Great Lake Swimmers 8 pm Monday, June 8, at Cozmic; $11 adv., $13 door. — Isabel Zacharias

THE SLOW BURNER

It's a troubling contradiction that today's music business — ostensibly an industry of songs — could make a quality songwriter like Ron Sexsmith feel antiquated and out of place.

"I feel like a guy who's making antique tables and chairs," the Canadian musician tells EW. "I've always felt out of place or unfashionable ever since my first record came out."

Nevertheless, Sexsmith is touring in support of his 14th studio record, 2015's Carousel One. The record features Sexsmith's creamy, sleepy Van Morrison-esque voice alongside elegant arrangements and intelligent songwriting.

"I'd love to hear a song from long ago," Sexsmith sings on the contemplative and melancholy track "Nothing Feels the Same Anymore." And that longing for times gone-by, and the pop music that defined those times, prevails throughout the record.

Ron Sexsmith has built a career writing slow-burners, and Carousel One is no different; it might take two or possibly three listens to find a song's hook but, if patient, there's always a pay-off.

"It's basically a travelogue of the music that I love and the influences that are in my DNA," Sexsmith says of Carousel One, listing songwriting influences like Johnny Mercer, Buddy Holly, Ray Davies and Randy Newman.

But if Sexsmith had to pick just one song to represent the record, he'd pick "Getaway Car."

"I love rock 'n' roll music," Sexsmith says. "A lot of music may rock but it doesn't necessarily roll and ["Getaway Car"] seems to, at least to my ears. It was a fun song to record, and it's even more fun to play live."

Joining Sexsmith on his first time through Eugene is mysterious, Berlin-based indie folk singer Alice Phoebe Lou.

"I've never played Eugene before so hopefully at least two people show up!" Sexsmith jokes.

South Africa's Alice Phoebe Lou joins Ron Sexsmith 8 pm Sunday, June 7, at WOW Hall; $17 adv., $20 door. All ages. — William Kennedy

FOLK THE SYSTEM

Mischief Brew still makes music for the same reasons they did in high school. According to lead singer Erik Petersen, his guitar and the road are as addictive as a bad habit.

"You're angry; you need a release," says Petersen, who also jams on guitar and mandolin for the folkpunk band. "We're older now. We have jobs, houses, some of us have kids. But it never gets old, and it keeps coming back to you."

More than a decade after forming, Mischief Brew is on tour once again to support a new record. This Is Not For Children comes out June 9 and is the first full-length record in their expansive collection not released on their own label, Fistolo Records — founded by Petersen and wife Denise Petersen in 2000.

While San Francisco label Alternative Tentacles will release the album, it still maintains the familiar DIY, lo-fi sound of the previous discography.

"We try to write songs that people would sing around a campfire," Petersen says. "We want our songs to transcend the iPod or the normal way you'd listen to music."

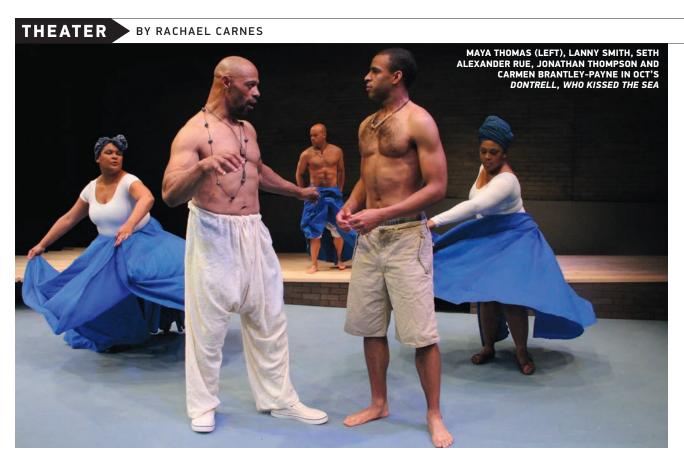

Mischief Brew only brings a three-piece band on this tour, so Petersen say they find creative ways to "spice up" their instrumentation. For example, drummer (Erik's brother Chris Petersen) often uses pots and pans or gas cans in his drum kit. In the past, the band has employed a vibraharp, violins, trumpets and other found objects on stage.

When they comes to Eugene, Petersen expects a diverse crowd: Older people, students, hippies, punks, freaks and normal folks who might feel a little adventurous, wanting a taste of something new.

"We try to make it open to everyone," he says. "At the same time, we're trying to subvert people and make them realize they're singing and dancing to a song about overthrowing the state."

Mischief Brew performs with Ramshackle Glory, Not A Part Of It and Bomb Pots 7 pm Tuesday, June 9, at The Boreal; $8 door, $9 online at theboreal.com/event-tickets. All ages. — Bryan Kalbrosky

FAITH, FATE AND FAMILY

A new vision of the hero in OCT's Dontrell, Who Kissed The Sea

he drums beat, heavy and slow at first, then picking up speed like a heartbeat. The rhythm pushes for answers, for ancestry. Dontrell cannot escape the dreams calling him to this quest — dreams of a forebearer who leapt to his death from a slave ship during the Middle Passage.

But Dontrell has a scholarship to maintain, a family to deal with and he can't swim. Making his way into the middle of the Atlantic feels as hopeless as any hero's journey. Faith, fate and family will all step in to shuffle his chances of success.

Dontrell, Who Kissed The Sea, now playing at Oregon Contemporary Theatre, is unlike anything I've seen. Author Nathan Alan Davis is a bewitching writer. He layers modern language, slang and cussing into a gorgeous script.

Up against these divine words are down-toearth characters. Dontrell is a believable hero, an honors student at the nexus of genius and madness. His family is neither mythically wise nor sordidly dysfunctional; they're just a group of generally good people doing their best, sharing moments of love amidst the tumult of lives that make up a home. I am grateful for Davis' understanding of bitchy types, and just how valuable they are in a family.

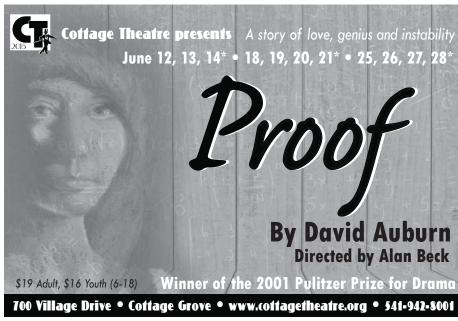

Co-directors Maya Thomas and Craig Willis cocoon this extraordinary script in a simple set with thoughtful projections. Insightful costuming and striking choreography illuminate the magical realism of the story. Weighty performances anchor the production.

Jonathan Thompson crafts a compassionate interpretation of Dontrell. Lanny Mitchell and Maya Thomas as Dad and Mom are powerful. Seth Alexander Rue gives wings to the joyful language of Robby.

Part of the National New Play Network Rolling World Premiere series, Dontrell is playing in five cities over the course of a year. And playwright Davis will be in Eugene to attend a free public forum and Q&A at 3 pm Friday, June 4, at OCT.

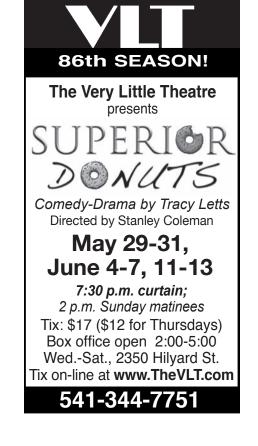

At this point, I ask that you set down this review and order your tickets for Dontrell, Who Kissed The Sea. This play illuminates a corner of the human condition and will change the way we understand a hero in the context of his family.

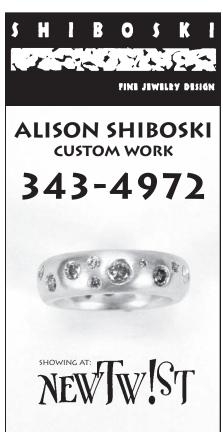

Dontrell, Who Kissed The Sea plays through June 13 at Oregon Contemporary Theatre; tickets at octheatre.org or 465-1506.

This month's dance kicks off with #instaballet at the First Friday ArtWalk.

"Watch Eugene Ballet Company dancers make a ballet!"#instaballet co-founder Suzanne Haag writes. "Audience members get to suggest steps (feel free to get inventive and a little crazy) to create a ballet to be performed at 8 pm." Catch it 5 to 8 pm Friday, June 5, at 771 Willamette (between 7th and 8th); come and go as you please. More info at instaballet.org; free.

A block away that same night, Kesey Square lights up from 6 to 7:30 pm, June 5, with Arts Alive, a dance, performance and visual art showcase curated by Susanna Meyer and hosted in conjunction with the First Friday ArtWalk.

"Various dance groups perform to live music, as visual artists interpret the scene," writes Meyer, who will also dance in the program with her daughter. On tap is a duet by DanceAbility International's Alito Alessi featuring Jana Meszaros and Kelcie Laube. Also look for original music composed by Paul Safar and performed with pianist Ben Farrell, a group piece by choreographer Laura Black, a new work by Alli Bach as well as dancers from Eugene's tango and Coalescence dance community; free.

Also on Friday, June 5, the UO Department of Dance offers its Spring Dance Loft, a showcase of work by students in the department, 8 pm at the Dougherty Dance Theatre, Gerlinger Annex; $3-$5.

A local circus artist who goes by the name Francia is launching her solo project, Bricolage Cirkus, 8 pm Friday and Saturday, June 5-6, at Bounce Gymnastics and Circus Art Center (329 W. 3rd Ave.), where she also works. "This is also a contemporary circus work with minimal makeup, costumes and very intimate," Francia writes to EW. "In so many ways circus arts are going back to basics, diverting from the over the top Cirque du Soleil-style productions."

Zapp Dance performs 6 pm Sunday, June 7, at the Hult Center; $15.

Eugene's largest hula school, Hulau Hula o Nu Pua o Hawai'i Nei, presents its annual show 2 pm Saturday, June 20, at Cascadia Middle School featuring hula performed by dancers of all ages. The theme is "Once Upon A Time," and several dances will tell the myths of ancient Hawai'i. "Proceeds will help send 25 dancers to a hula competition on Big Island in November," event organizer Buck Mueller says. See napuaohawaiinei.com.

Lane Community College's Dance Program offers its Open Show at 3 pm Tuesday, June 2, at the Ragozzino Performance Hall. The show will feature ballet, modern, jazz and hip-hop dance; free.

"At the end of each term, students in all dance classes come together to perform Open Show on the main stage in a setting that is informal and fun," says Bonnie Simoa, LCC's dance department head.

All That! Dance Company presents On Fire! Dance Concert, featuring performers ages two to adult, in the Powers Auditorium, 7 pm Friday and Saturday, June 26-27; $15. For tickets, visit wkly.ws/20v.

On the audition front, Xcape Dance Academy holds tryouts for its new competition team program for kids through adults 4 to 9 pm Monday, June 29. Visit xcapedance.com for more information.

And a tip of the hat to DanceAbility International, for its recent granting successes, pulling in funding from the Oregon Community Foundation, the Wheeler Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts in support of DanceAbility's organizational capacity-building and a national tour of new work. Kudos!

BOOKS

BY CAMILLA MORTENSEN

RAPE AND A COLLEGE TOWN

Missoula is a must-read on campus on Krakauer doesn't start Missoula: Rape and the Justice System in a College Town (Doubleday, $28.95) with one of the worst scenes in the book; he eases into it with the police pulling up to tell a young woman named Allison Huguet that her rapist has confessed.

Only a couple pages later does Krakauer tell of the assault and of Beth Huguet's horror when her daughter calls her at 4 am gasping with panicked sounds into the phone before screaming, "He's chasing me! Help me! Save me! Mom!"

Huguet's attacker, Beau Donaldson, a University of Montana football player and Huguet's childhood friend, later pleaded guilty, but Huguet had to face the intense backlash that accompanies accusing a local sports star of rape. Montana Griz fans are as maniacal about football as Ducks fans.

When the book came out, residents of the small Montana college town objected to its name, saying it made Missoula sound like a rape capital, but as Krakauer himself points out, the real problem is that what went wrong in Missoula — everything from victim blaming and police not prosecuting — goes on across the country, and should sound familiar to readers here in Eugene.

Last year EW collected rape statistics for Eugene, Springfield, the UO and Lane County from 2009 through roughly (depending on the jurisdiction) 2014. We found that out of more than 700 reported rapes, 19 were prosecuted by the Lane County District Attorney's office.

Krakauer follows several sexual assault cases in Missoula as he tracks just what led the U.S. Department of Justice to launch a federal investigation into the University of Montana and into the area's police and prosecutors. Between January 2008 and May 2012, the DOJ found that of 85 Missoula rape cases sent to prosecutors by the police, only 14 resulted in charges.

JON Krakauer

RAPE AND THE JUSTICE SYSTEM IN A COLLEGE TOWN

Krakauer, an investigative journalist who made his name with books like Into the Wild and Into Thin Air, grabs the reader not only through his use of narrative but also by flexing his investigative chops (and I'll note here he draws heavily on the work of former Missoulian reporter Gwen Florio, who is a friend of mine).

Sometimes his prose tends to the purple — alleged and guilty rapists wail and weep in confessions and courtrooms — but the research and passion he puts into the writing make it worth a wail or two.

Krakauer delves into the fascinating research of David Lisak, a clinical psychologist who testified at the rape trial of Jordan Johnson, another Grizzlies football player and one who happens to hail from Eugene. Lisak points out his research shows that far from a creeper in the bushes, rapists can be likable, sociable, even outwardly kind, and some of these congenial-seeming folks are actually serial rapists.

Lisak also testified that based on his research, there is no one way victims respond to rape, as seen in EW's recent story about UO student Laura Hanson: "Victims of nonstranger rape are often very confused about what happened. They may be very upset. Distressed. But they don't automatically label what happened to them as rape."

The book should be mandatory reading at the UO from fraternities to administration. Don't read Missoula thinking, "This could happen here." Read Missoula knowing it does happen here. ■ two different encyclopedias. Even as a teenager he was obsessed with learning all he could. He got especially consumed with trying to master Aristotle's Metaphysics, which did not easily yield its secrets to him. He read it 40 times, memorizing every word. When he finally understood it, he was so excited he celebrated by giving out money and gifts to destitute strangers. I suspect you will soon be having an equivalent breakthrough, Aries. At last uou will grasp a truth that has eluded you for a long time. Congratulations in advance!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): When it's rush hour in Tokyo, unwieldy crowds of commuters board the trains and subways. They often need help at squeezing in. Railway workers known as oshiya, or pushers, provide the necessary force. Wearing crisp uniforms, white gloves, and neat hats, they cram the last stragglers into each car. I fore-see the possibility of you being called on to perform a metaphorical version of the service these pushers provide. Is there a polite and respectful way for you to be indelicate in a worthy cause? Could you bring light-hearted tact to bear as you seek an outcome that encourages everyone to compromise?

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Nobel Prize-winning physicists Wolfgang Pauli and Niels Bohr were both amused at how counterintuitive their innovative theories seemed. Once Pauli was lecturing a group of eminent scientists about a radical new hypothesis. Bohr got out of his seat in the audience and walked up to the front to interrupt his colleague. "We all agree that your theory is crazy," Bohr told Pauli. "The question that divides us is whether it is crazy enough to have a chance of being correct. My own feeling is that it is not crazy enough." Pauli defended himself. "It is crazy enough!" he said. But Bohr was insistent. "It's not crazy enough!" he argued. I'm going to pose a comparable query to you, Gemini. Are your new ideas and possibilities crazy enough to be true? Make sure they CANCER (June 21-July 22): You've wandered into an awkward phase of your cycle. Missed connections have aroused confusion. Disjointed events have led to weirdness. I've got a suggestion for how you might be able to restore clarity and confidence: Make a foray into a borderland and risk imaginative acts of heroism. Does that sound too cryptic or spooky? How about if I say it like this: Go on an unpredictable quest that will free your trapped vitality, or try a mysterious experiment that will awaken your sleeping magic. P.S. For best results, ask for help every step of the way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Gesamtkunstwerk is a German word that can be translated as "total art work" or "all-embracing art form." It refers to a creative masterpiece that makes use of several genres. The 19th-century composer Richard Wagner had this in mind when he produced his opera cycle The Ring of the Nibelung, which included orchestral music, singing, theater, and literature. I'm invoking the spirit of Gesamtkunstwerk for your use, Leo. The coming weeks will be an excellent time to synthesize and coordinate all the things you do best, and express them

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Defender was a popular video game that young people played in video arcades during the 1980s. Fifteen-year-old Steve Juraszek was profiled in Time magazine after he racked up a record-breaking 16 million points while playing the game for 16 hours straight. But when his high school principal found out that Juraszek had skipped classes to be at the arcade, he was suspended. I'm wondering if there may soon be a similar development in your own life, Virgo. Will you have to pay a small price for your success? You should at least be prepared to risk an acceptable loss in order to accomplish an important goal.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): People I meet are sometimes taken aback by the probing questions I ask them. Recently an acquaintance said to me, "Why don't you feel driven to talk about yourself all the time, like everyone else?" I told him the truth: "Being curious is just the way I was made. Maybe it's because of my Mercury in Gemini, or my seventh-house sun, or my three planets in Libra." I suspect that you are due to go through a phase similar to the mode I'm so familiar with. If it doesn't happen naturally, I suggest you coax it out. You need to be extra inquisitive. You'll benefit from digging as deeply as you dare. The more information you uncover, the better you decisions will be.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): I love to watch an evolved Scorpio get his or her needs met by helping other people get their needs met. It's thrilling to behold the paradoxical Scorpio assets in action: the combination of manipulativeness and generosity; the animal magnetism working in service to the greater good; the resourceful willpower that carries out hidden agendas and complex strategies designed to make the world a better place. I expect to see a lot of this idiosyncratic wisdom from you in the coming weeks.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): "Would that life were like the shadow cast by a wall or a tree," says the Talmud. "But it is like the shadow of a bird in flight." That's a lyrical sentiment, but I don't agree with it. I've come to prefer the shimmering dance over the static stance. The ever-shifting play of light and dark is more interesting to me than the illusion of stability. I feel more at home in the unpredictable flow than in the stagnant trance of certainty What about you, Sagittarius? I suggest that in the immediate future you cultivate an appreciation for the joys and challenges of the shimmering dance

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The core of your horoscope comes from the poem "A Color of the Sky" by Tony Hoagland. Imagine that you are the "I" who is saying the following: "What I thought was an end turned out to be a middle. What I thought was a brick wall turned out to be a tunnel. What I thought was an injustice turned out to be a color of the sky." Please understand, Capricorn, that speaking these words might not make total sense to you yet. You may have to take them on faith until you gather further evidence. But I urge you to speak them anyway. Doing so will help generate the transformations you need in order to make them come true.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lessons in luck are coming your way. Will they help you attract more luck? Maybe. Will they show you how to make better use of your luck? Maybe. A lot depends on your ability to understand and love the paradox of luck. I've assembled a few enigmatic teachings to prepare you. 1. "Luck is believing you're — Tennessee Williams. 2. "It is a great piece of skill to know how to guide your luck even while waiting for it." — Baltasar Gracián. 3. "Sometimes not getting what you want is a brilliant stroke of luck." — Lorii Myers. 4. "The harder I work, the luckier I get." — Samuel Goldwyn. 5. "You've got to try your luck at least once a day, because you could be going around lucky all day and not even know it." — Jimmy Dean. 6. "Go and wake up your luck." —

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The word "boudoir" means a woman's bedroom. But hundreds of years ago, it had a more specific definition. It was a room where a well-bred girl was sent when she was pouting. "Boudoir" is derived from the French verb bouder, which means "to sulk." If it were in my power, Pisces, I would send you to the sulking room right now. In fact, I would encourage you to sulk. In my opinion, a good long sulk would be just the right $prescription\ for\ you.\ It\ would\ trigger\ brains torms\ about\ how\ to\ change\ the\ soggy,\ foggy\ conditions\ that\ warranted$ your sulking in the first place.

SAVAGE

I'm a 35-year-old divorced man. I've been on plenty of dates since my marriage ended, but I invariably get asked this question on or before date #2: "Why did you get divorced?" This is where everything goes to shit. I'm honest: "We got divorced because I cheated on my wife. A lot." This usually catches my date off guard because I'm "not the kind of guy I'd have thought could do that." But I can hardly get past date #2 after this, because this information is "too much to handle." Sometimes my dates will admit to having cheated too. Not even other cheaters are interested in seeing me again. I was a good husband and father for seven years. But after four sexless years of marriage, I strayed. Crying myself to sleep every night took its toll, and I self-medicated with casual sex with attractive women Two years and 20 women later, I got caught. I don't hide the facts; I own my mistakes. I've grown and learned from my mistakes. But it's hard for most women to see past "cheater." In my mind, anything less than complete honesty would validate the belief that I'm still a lying cheat. But complete honesty is kicking my ass and ruining potential relationships.

Forthright About Cheating, Then Silence

 $I'm\ going\ to\ give\ you\ the\ benefit\ of\ the\ doubt,\ FACTS,\ and\ assume\ that\ mistreatment,\ neglect,\ and\ stress$ didn't extinguish your wife's libido. (You weren't shitty to your wife, right? You were helping with the kids, right?) I'm also going to assume that you made a good-faith effort to address the sexless state of your marriage before you began self-medicating with all those beautiful women. (You sought counseling and got $medical\ checkups,\ right?)\ And\ I'm\ going\ to\ allow\ for\ the\ possibility\ that\ your\ wife\ may\ have\ married\ you$ under false pretenses, i.e., she wasn't into sex or you or both, but she wanted marriage and kids and figured you would do. (I'm going to allow for that because that shit happens.)

These favorable assumptions—of the kind typically extended to persons seeking advice in a format like this—don't exonerate you of all responsibility for cheating on your wife. But if they're accurate, FACTS, they do put your cheating in a particular guilt-mitigating context. \\

And that's what you need to do when you answer that question about why your marriage ended: Put your cheating in context. Most people intuitively understand that wedding vows aren't sexual suicide pacts and are capable of feeling sympathy for those who find themselves in sexless marriages. But instead of emphasizing the context in which you cheated—the emotional dynamics of your marriage, those long sexless years—you're emphasizing the breakdick pace at which you cheated and the quality of the pussy you landed.

"I cheated! A lot! With 20 beautiful women!" is one telling of the truth, FACTS, but it's not the most flattering telling of the truth (for you) or the most comforting telling of the truth (for your date). Instead of saying, "I cheated with 20 women, all of them babes. I banged the living shit out of each and every one of them!" $which \ makes \ you \ sound \ more \ boastful \ than \ remorseful, try \ saying \ something \ like \ this: ``After four \ sexless$ years of marriage, I strayed. It was the wrong thing to do, but I was desperate. The cheating ended my marriage, which obviously needed to end, but it's not something I ever want to do again." Omit the detail about the number of women you cheated with while emphasizing your determination to avoid making the same mistake in your next committed relationship. Tell your date that you are looking for a strong sexual connection (and other things) with someone you can communicate with about sex (and other things). Because you're not a cheater—not anymore.

 $l'm\,a\,36-year-old\,heteros exual\,female\,who\,has\,been\,reading\,you\,for\,the\,better\,part\,of\,20\,years.\,That's$ why when my formerly lovely husband descended into a hellish depression that turned our 10-year marriage into a loveless, sexless, miserable thing that I didn't recognize, I knew what I had to do. I $couldn't\ get\ out\ for\ various\ financial,\ personal,\ and\ practical\ reasons,\ so\ l\ began\ an\ emotionally\ full-like the proof of the proof$ filling, sanity-saving affair with a married man in the same situation. My emotional and sexual needs are getting met for the first time in years. The problem is that when we are together, my mind goes to how much I wish we could both chuck our marriages and be together all of the time, and I feel more miserable in my marriage because I can't help comparing the two men in my life. Do you have any advice for keeping from mentally going to "happily ever after" when you are trying to stay balanced in marriage-saving-affair land?

Secret Affair Necessaru Escape

An affair doesn't come bundled with the same crap that a marriage does, SANE, so your time with Happy Affair Man isn't burdened by mental and/or physical health crises, just as it's not roughed up by ever-festering conflicts about money or chores or kids or all of the above. So let's say you left Depressed Husband Man for Happy Affair Man, and he left his wife for you. How long would it be before you and Second Husband Man were facing down some similar crap or brand-new crap? Probably not long. You might be happier, but you won't be happily-ever-after happier because no one ever is. The subject is moot, of course, if you're not in a position to end your marriage and Happy Affair Man isn't either.

I have been in a gay relationship for almost six years, and we are getting married in September. We are both predominantly tops, so we've been having threesomes for the majority of the time we've been together. About eight months ago, we had a threesome with someone who has since become a good friend. I have developed a strong bond with our third. My fiancé is not an overly affectionate person, and while I've had issues with that in the past and overlooked it, these past months have shown me how much I long for physical affection. My fiancé is threatened by the two of us showing affection. I reassure him as best I can, but nothing I say makes him feel less threatened by my wanting to have alone time with our third. I do not want to give up the bond I have with our third, and I have zero inten $tion\ of\ leaving\ my\ fianc\'e.\ If\ we\ could\ help\ him\ get\ more\ comfortable, it\ could\ be\ a\ perfect\ situation\ for\ perfect\ situation$ everuone, with all of our needs being met.

Sincerely Perplexed Lad In Triad

Seeing as your third sounds like a better match for you than your fiancé in several important ways—bot $tom\ to\ your\ top,\ more\ physically\ affection at e-l'm\ wondering\ why\ you\ wouldn't\ want\ to\ dump\ the\ fianc\'e$ to run off with your third. Your fiancé is probably wondering the same thing. Unless your fiancé is willing to enter into a polyamorous triad, SPLIT, you'll probably have to pick one or the other.
